India, the world's second fastest growing economy, along with the world's leading economies have one thing in common when it comes to Management and Leadership Development – The Global School of Applied Management (GSAM).

By amalgamating best practices from countries including India, understanding and fusing management principles in conjunction with leaders across the globe, GSAM's primary objective is to bring quality management education to corporate India's doorstep.

GSAM has undertaken extensive international research in an attempt to understand current approaches to management development in India. Through broad consultation across many geographical and industrial boundaries on a global scale, GSAM has identified a significant need for a developmental program that enables managers in India to deeply explore their own interpersonal strengths, weaknesses and opportunities as they relate to the management of others.

The Global School of Applied Management (GSAM) with their initiative, the Global Applied Management Colloquium, will aim to make a meaningful contribution to increasing India's talent pool of skilled, well-rounded managers and enable their workforce in fulfilling India's role as a leading managerial powerhouse.
